Dear ISWI Participant:

This is a recap of what most of you already know:
- the ISWI website is taken care of Mitko of Bulgaria.
The website is here: www.iswi-secretariat.org
- the ISWI Newsletter is edited by me, George Maeda.
Instructions for subscribing and un-subscribing are found at the end of this email text.

At his website, Mitko has created a marvelous World Map showing the location of ISWI scientific ground instruments. What is more, he regularly updates it --- so please help when he asks you for updates on your ISWI array. (Recently, the MAGDAS Project gave him the geographical coordinates for the ten new MAGDAS units that were installed last year in various parts of the world.)

Would you like to see his map? I made a simple guide, which I attach as pdf. Our community is making lots of impressive progress with this deployment of instruments.

Most faithfully and exuberantly yours,

: George Maeda

ISWI Website: www.iswi-secretariat.org

The screenshot shows the ISWI website interface. At the top, the text "International Space Weather Initiative" and "ISWI" are displayed. A navigation menu includes "About", "Organization", "Projects", "Meetings", "Publications", and "News&Blogs". The "Projects" menu is open, showing options: "Instrument Projects", "Instrument Leaders", "ISWI instrument distribution" (which is checked with a red mark), "ISWI instrument Web-sites", "Participating Countries", "ISWI Space Science Training", and "Gift Workshops". A large ISWI logo is centered on the page, featuring the letters "ISWI" in a stylized font over a background of a sun and Earth. A visitor counter in the top right corner shows "5,612 Visitors" and a date range from "16 Oct 2010" to "18 Jan 2012".

To access the ISWI Instrument Distribution Map:

1. Goto this website.
2. Click on "Projects" tab.
3. Click on "ISWI instrument distribution" --- as shown above.
